Now more than ever, a message of hope, compassion, empathy and understanding is needed.

Now more than ever, children need to see themselves reflected in the pages of the books they read. Readers of all ages need to be able to “read their world” to both see themselves, and those are who different, whether by culture, religion, sexual orientation, special needs or ethnicity.

Now more than ever, we need to come together as a nation of beautifully diverse people.

Multicultural Children’s Book Day is proud to offer an initiative and holiday that encourages discovery, hope, acceptance and exploration through the pages of diverse children’s literature.

As our fourth Multicultural Children’s Book Day holiday approaches on January 27, 2017, we are thrilled to have you as part of our amazing community of supporters! With enthusiasm, optimism and hope, we are preparing for MCBD 2017 and hope you will, again, join our celebration of diversity through children's books.

Thank you for cultivating understanding, kindness, inclusion and exploration of this beautiful world in your classroom.

Activities Inspired by this Booklist

Never Say a Mean Word Again by Jacqueline Jules

(An excerpt from Jump Into a Books’ book review with extension activities)

The problem starts when Hamza views Samuel’s clumsy actions as mean intended. So to return Samuel’s unkindness, Hamza calls him mean names. Samuel then feels it’s his turn to show unkindness but it always unfolds into kindness. How can we do this in our own lives? How can we turn unkindness into kindness?

Let’s start with the way we speak. Here are a few nice things to say to people whenever you should encounter them or to keep positive conversation flowing:

- Hi my name is ______ what’s yours?
- Can I help you?
- What’s your favorite _____? (color, game, animal etc.)
- Tell me more
- I forgive you
- Please
- I’m glad you’re my friend.
- You’re awesome
- I like you
- That’s incredible!
- Want to play?
- Want to play_____? (Charades, hop scotch, board game, cards, Hide & Seek, Simon Says, 20 Questions, I Spy, Catch).
- Awesome

Along with kind words, we can also choose not to view someone’s unkindness as unkindness but an invitation to play. If someone should say something unkind, compliment them on something and then include them in an activity.

Please note: That within the activity above, we are referring to simple childhood disagreements and not full on bullying which is a much bigger problem and is dealt with differently. It’s my hope that simple kind actions when children are small will provide them with the tools they need to deal with conflicts in a kind way as they grow as opposed to aggression.

Enemy Pie by Derek Munson

Bullying has been a very real problem all over the globe. Following are some perspectives and activities to help you and your family investigate and create solutions which work for you and yours.

Storytelling:

The story behind Dandelion allows and engages the imagination to allow readers to “live” the story. Storytelling is an excellent teaching strategy because stories ignite kids’ interest, helping them to create vivid mental images and stories activate the thinking process. The storytelling process is also brought to light in Pacer.org’s tale of SpookyThe Pumpkin.

Spooky is a square pumpkin living in a round pumpkin world. Through Spooky, Pace.org has created a wonderful system of stories, role-playing, and video to help young minds understand the effects of bullying.

Empathy skills: Happy-Mad-Sad.

- Encourage children to label their own feelings and tell each other how they feel about bullying.
- Discuss how children who are bullied might feel.
- Explain that despite differences between people, everyone experiences certain basic feelings.
- Remind children how they felt in situations like those faced by others in distress.
- Model empathy by talking about how you identify another’s distress and think of ways to help.

Encourage your kids to be creative by creating "bullying art.” Ask them to create masks depicting the different human emotions. This helps to get them thinking about bullying and the emotions that go along with it.

Our friends over at No Time For Flash Cards has a great tutorial on making Emotions Masks from Paper Plates.

Kindness Activities

10 Kindness Week Ideas for Schools:

1. The Kindness Tree: Create a big paper tree in the hallway or classroom using leaves or Post-it notes, have students, teachers, and staff write the random acts of kindness they’ve done and witnessed. It’s a great way to track and highlight random acts of kindness. Avery.com has a Thankful Tree activity that could easily be modified into a Kindness Tree project.

Use Avery Design & Print Online to pre-print tags that can be customized to whatever message your students want to share. Have your students fill out a tag or two and attach them to the tree. Once everyone’s filled out a tag, enjoy reading everyone’s responses and trying to guess who wrote each one. OR use the wonderful example shared by Ripple Kindness on their Twitter Feed. (source: https://mobile.twitter.com/RippleKindness/status/562032163093512192)

2. Paper Chains of Kindness: Have pre-cut strips of colored paper. As students, teachers, and staff do kind things, write it down on one of the color strips, loop it through the preceding chain link and tape or glue it in place. This is a great addition to the kindness corner in your school or classroom. It is visually encouraging and always ongoing. It’s a great way to track the year of kindness in your school and classroom. Crayola.com has a great tutorial on how to create your own Caring Chain here: http://www.crayola.com/crafts/caring-chain-to-stop-bullying--craft/

3. The Kindness Jar: Take a tall canning jar or any tall jar. As each person in the classroom or school community witnesses an act of kindness, they write it down on a slip of paper and place it in the kindness jar. At the end of each week read how much kindness has been generated in your classroom.
4. Kindness Lunch Mix-up: Intentionally sit by someone new at lunch today. Be sure to remind students that this is an act of kindness and to use their best “get to know” you manners. It’s especially fun when the entire school is doing this. Many new friends are made on this day. Another type of lunch kindness is to sit by someone who is eating alone or is new to the school or classroom.

5. We Appreciate You: Use small cut out hearts. Pick 5 people who you appreciate and let them know that by giving them their heart. Along with giving them to friends at school, be sure to let teachers, cafeteria workers, librarians, and staff know how much you appreciate them.

I appreciate you!
6. Smile Tag: Print the word SMILE on business card stock for one quarter of the school or classroom. Teachers and staff hand them out to begin with. Once you get a smile card, you have to tag someone else with it, and smile while giving it to them.

7. Kindness Bingo: This is a great re-make of a traditional and fun classic teaching kindness at the same time. Bingo cards are available here. RandomActsofKindness.org has a wonderful free downloadable Kindness Bingo Game here:

https://www.randomactsofkindness.org/for-educators/free-k-12-lesson-plans/497-kindness-bingo
8. School Trash Pick-up: Keeping our school grounds, building, and classrooms is a great kindness to the entire community. Pick up a piece of trash today. Be sure to see if you can recycle, reuse, or repurpose it.

9. Book Buddies: An older reading student gets together with a younger student and reads to them. This is usually organized by mixing two classrooms, an older classroom and a younger classroom. The older and younger students develop a relationship around reading and kindness. Try arranging this once a quarter or semester.

10. The Kindness Garden: Creating beauty for others is a great kindness. Choose a flower bed at school and create a flower, or vegetable garden of kindness. Each class contributes plants and/or seeds as well as does some volunteering in the garden during recess.
The Mission of MCBD

Our mission is to not only raise awareness for the kid’s books that celebrate diversity, but to get more of these of books into classrooms and libraries.

Children’s reading and play advocates Valarie Budayr from Jump Into a Book and Mia Wenjen from Pragmatic Mom have teamed up to create an ambitious (and much needed) national event. On January 27th, 2014 Jump into a Book and Pragmatic Mom presented their very first Multicultural Children’s Book Day as a way of celebrating diversity in children’s books.

The results were overwhelming as authors, publishers, parents, teachers, bloggers and librarians joined forces to offer up an online event designed to shine the spotlight on diversity in children’s literature.

As the non-profit initiative continues full steam ahead, MCCBD’s main focus continues to be to put multicultural children’s books on shelves and into the hands of deserving families through book donations and fundraising.

The MCCBD has partnered with the Junior Library Guild to provide one FREE hardcover, library quality multicultural children’s book to any classroom, school or teacher who signs up for the Multicultural Children’s Book Day Free Books for Classroom Campaign. Learn how you can get a free book for your students here:

MCBD also has another free resource for educators and parents: The Diversity Book Lists & Resources for Teachers and Parents. Go here to view all of our booklists grouped by a number of different multicultural topics.

Stay in the loop on all of the MCBD inspired book reviews, author visits and giveaways by searching for their official hashtag #ReadYourWorld on social media.
